Yesterday on Mount Everest, a heroic dog rescued a group of climbers from freezing to death.

The problem began when a group of adventurous climbers went on a challenging expedition to reach the heights of the snowy mountain. However, their journey became dangerous because of bad weather, leaving them stuck and in serious trouble. Fortunately, a brave rescue dog named Rocky found them and went to get help. Rocky led the rescue team to the stranded climbers.

"Rocky is smart; he reached the climbers and gave them comfort and help," said the rescue team leader.

"Rocky's presence lifted our spirits," added Jack, one of the climbers.

The climbers were taken to the hospital for a medical check-up and are now recovering well. The rescue team praised Rocky for his bravery and quick actions. The rescue center reminded people to always prepare well and check weather conditions before climbing. Rocky's courage will be remembered as an inspiring example of loyalty and heroism.
